humanity of the homeless and other unfortunates.

Are there other officers there in the EPD whose texts were not revealed, and who harbor similar depraved attitudes? Are there other EPD officers who were aware of the vile attitudes of Reyna-Sanchez and Meftah, and potentially others, and who said nothing, did nothing and reported nothing to their superiors? Were their superiors aware of this and did nothing? According to the NCJ's article there are, indeed, indications of this. It is not unreasonable to assume there may be others lurking in the department.

It would be nice if the city of Eureka's hiring of an investigatory firm were to answer these questions, but I'm not holding my breath. History shows and contemporary accounts of similar incidents in other places reveal that such investigations have a way of disappearing or dissolving into legal murkiness.

The best, and only, sufficient answer would be the establishment by the county board of supervisors of a citizen's law enforcement review board (CLERB). This board would have the authority to launch subpoena-based investigations and, upon finding cause, to terminate the employment of officers like Reyna-Sanchez and Meftah. Membership of the CLERB must also include representatives of the most vulnerable and underserved communities targeted by renegade officers: the homeless, veterans, drug users, the mentally ill and racial minorities.

John Webb, Trinidad

Editor:

Kudos to Thadeus Greenson and the Journal for the excellent investigative article on the Eureka Police Department. It cited the Sacramento Bee articles and provided additional distressing information and background on problems in EPD. It described efforts by Chief Watson to make effective changes. I've read Chief Watson's booklet, "Report to the Community on 21st Century Policing," and believe he is making sincere, good faith efforts to bring changes.

In April, the Humboldt County Democratic Central Committee passed a resolution calling for a citizens' law enforcement review board with subpoena power, and majority representation of members of groups in the community who have long been ill-served and abused by law enforcement. The HCDCC created an ad hoc committee to gather community support for the CLERB. We believe a CLERB would improve relations between law enforcement and the community. It could support efforts by Chief Watson and, hopefully, other law enforcement leaders to bring positive change to both enforcement and community relations. That is our goal: We do not support "defunding the police" but seek accountability, equitable treatment and positive relations with the agencies.

We also believe that a CLERB could save the county and cities a lot of money in legal actions and settlements. An example: the infamous "$100,000 haircuts" — see the Journal's edition from July of 1991, (volume II, issue 7).

There have been two earlier efforts to create citizen oversight boards, both of which withered away because they had no real subpoena power, little or no investigative power, were basically advisory only and the public lost confidence in them. We need a strong CLERB!

Clarification

A Views column in the June 3, 2021, edition of the North Coast Journal headlined "GET Vaccinated!" included a potentially misleading sentence. The three COVID-19 vaccines currently being administered in the United States have received emergency use authorizations from the U.S. Food and Drug Administration. The Journal regrets any confusion.

In Favor of a Police Review Board

Editor:

We have now seen the true colors of at least two Eureka Police Department officers ('Mission, Values, Vision,' June 3). It is obvious that Sgt. Rodrigo Reyna-Sanchez and officer Mark Meftah need to be immediately terminated. These are people officially charged with protecting and serving the most vulnerable, unempowered and defenseless segments of society. We now know, thanks to the anonymous leaker of their secret toxic texts, that they have zero willingness to respect the

The busiest place in McKinleyville was often not too busy, as this photo of L. D. Graeter's General Merchandise store shows. The town was first called Minorsville, in honor of local luminary Isaac Minor, but at his request the name was changed in 1903 to honor assassination victim William McKinley. Near Graeter's store the Hammond Railroad's line crossed Central Avenue on its way to the Fieldbrook Valley. The tracks have been replaced by pavement on what is now Railroad Avenue. A merger brings promises of expansion for Humboldt's revolutionary, patient-centered palliative care company

By Thadeus Greenson

thad@northcoastjournal.com

Resolution Care, Humboldt County's groundbreaking palliative care company, has been sold to Vynca, an advanced care planning technology company, in a merger that Resolution Care founder Michael Fratkin hopes will ultimately allow for a national expansion of the patient-centered care the company has prided itself on providing.

Founded in 2014, Resolution Care's palliative care teams rely heavily on telemedicine to help people live out their lives comfortably and on their own terms in the face of serious — often fatal — illness. With patients and quality of life as its focus, Resolution Care provides a litany of services, viewing healthcare not as a simple matrix of treatments and medications, but of desired outcomes with the goal of giving people the highest quality of life. As such, the company does everything from helping its patients fight housing insecurity to getting to the grocery store to navigating healthcare services and making end-of-life plans.

Vynca, meanwhile, was founded in 2013 to create technology and analytics to help patients and providers document and share end-of-life planning documents, reducing medical errors, adverse efforts and unwanted healthcare utilization, according to a press release.

Fratkin said he's confident the merging of Vynca's engineering and software know-how, as well as the deep relationships the company has forged with healthcare systems throughout the country, with Resolution Care's model for the delivery of patient-centered care will be a perfect marriage, allowing more people to get the personalized care they deserve.

"The hope is to partner and collaborate with hospices around the country, as well as other palliative care programs," he said. "What we bring is the ability to take care of the actual people who have the actual illness and the actual challenges to their lived experiences. What they bring is business intelligence, relationships and a hunger and thirst to finance growth."

Ironically, Fratkin said the COVID-19 pandemic has pushed Resolution Care forward and, to some extent, proven the efficacy of its model.

Since its inception, Fratkin said Resolution Care did about 40 percent of its contact with clients through video conferencing, mostly out of necessity as it worked to reach patients across the region, some of whom live in remote areas. At the time, it was groundbreaking.

"Nobody had used telemedicine for home-based palliative care delivery — we were the first," Fratkin said, adding that it was an idea he "stumbled across" after noticing "this smart phone in my pocket might be a really good tool for treating people." Over time, Fratkin came to believe video was often more than just a "really good" tool for treating seriously ill patients — it was a happy medium between the clinical confines of medical offices that left patients feeling like numbers and the in-home visits that could impose additional stresses on their lives and leave providers emotionally drained.

When shelter in place became the law of the land last March, almost all of Resolution Care's client contacts shifted to video. Fratkin said the company found the model to be both more efficient and equally effective.

"Allowing people to be in their home and reaching them through technology allows them to stay put and not to burn gas and to actually be in their natural habitat, and that's a big deal," he said. "From an organizational perspective, not having our staff driving from place to place — that's also enormously valuable in building a workable, sustainable and efficient system."

Connecting with clients through a digital "window" also allows care providers into patients' homes without invading their space or dragging them into a clinical environment, both of which can cause undue stress, Fratkin said.

“We’ve taught our staff to be extremely nuanced and intentional in how they use the time they have with the people we care for, so we get a lot of intimacy without the breakdown of the boundary between us and them,” Fratkin said, adding that it also allows staff in a profession with extraordinarily high burnout rates to work from spaces they find nurturing, relaxing and sustaining. “That’s been better for our staff members as they cope with the challenges and stress of working with sick people that, for the most part, they really, really like. It’s a safe and sustainable way to approach people who are going through unbelievable amounts of crisis and difficulty.”

Over the past year, Fratkin said the company has expanded to caring for about 180 people to 230 with essentially the same staff, while its two main measures of quality — patient satisfaction and the avoidance of unwanted acute care — have held steady or even improved.

Fratkin said its been “validating” to watch the use of telemedicine expand exponentially in response to the pandemic, saying it’s also opened up some teaching opportunities for him locally. One of those came as Open Door looked to expand its video care, both to serve its patients and retain revenue streams.

Open Door CEO Tory Starr said it already had the technology to do so but needed to learn from experienced care teams the best practices of treating patients remotely.

“Resolution Care conducted a series of ‘lunch and learn’ presentations with our care teams to provide their learnings from doing this type of service delivery,” Starr said in an email to the Journal. “They spent time with our teams in question-and-answer sessions so that they could help coach our teams with the challenges they identified through their

From the outset of the pandemic, Fratkin said he began talking regularly with Vynca co-founder Ryan Van Wert, an old friend, about “what a serious illness management platform would look like if it had optimized technology and analytics” that helped a foundation of human-centered care providers.

“These two things together — human beings taking care of human beings with the best possible tools — is an idea where one plus one equals three,” he said.

Resolution Care President Brian Mistler, who joined the company two years ago after working as a local hospital and healthcare administrator, was similarly bullish about the prospects moving forward.

“We’re excited about the opportunity this offers to increase access to care for those living with serious illness, Mistler said. “By leveraging innovative technology, we can bring more care to individuals in need here in rural Northern California, across the state and beyond.”

Under the deal announced last week, Fratkin will become Vynca’s chief medical officer. And, Fratkin stressed, all local employees will be retained and the 230 or so current patients of Resolution Care will not see any changes.

“Everyone stays,” Fratkin said, adding that the company will also be looking to make some new hires. “That was really important — that everyone who has been part of bringing us to this moment gets to stay and, I would say, their future is both brighter and more solid than it has been. It’s nice not to be a start-up anymore.” ●

HumCo Still in Orange as State Readies to Reopen

Humboldt County Public Health reported nine new COVID-19 cases as the Journal went to press June 8, as well as two new hospitalizations.

“Since the beginning of the pandemic, a total of 192 people have been hospitalized and 46 local residents have died,” a press release states. “None of them were vaccinated.”

The report came after the state announced earlier in the day that Humboldt County remains in its orange or “moderate” risk tier, keeping in place restrictions on local businesses imposed in April.

Public Health is continuing to urge residents to get vaccinated, with clinics scheduled this week at College of the Redwoods in Eureka on June 10 from 2 to 6 p.m. and June 13 from 2 to 5 p.m. Although walk-ins are welcome at Public Health clinics, appointments are highly encouraged. To make an appointment at a clinic or pharmacy, and to request help with transportation, visit www.vaccines.gov.

Public Health also reported last week that the California Division of Occupational Safety and Health approved revisions yesterday to its workplace safety regulations, which apply to most workers in the state. The requirements generally allow workers who are fully vaccinated to work unmasked in settings where everyone else in the workplace is vaccinated and symptom free. They also lift physical distancing requirements in indoor settings after July 31, but require employers to make N95 masks available to any unvaccinated employees.

When the state updated its COVID-19 risk tiers for the last time June 8, it kept Humboldt County in its orange “moderate” tier, allowing local businesses to operate as they have since April until the state eases most restrictions June 15. According to the state’s data, Humboldt County recorded 5.1 new COVID-19 cases per 100,000 residents and had a test-positivity rate of 3.6 percent over the seven-day period. Humboldt’s numbers dwarf those of the state as a whole, which recorded 2 new COVID-19 case per 100,000 residents and a test-positivity rate of 0.8 percent.

The county’s test positivity rate has gone from 3.6 percent in November, to 7.3 percent in December and 9.9 percent in January, before dropping to 6.5 percent in February. In March, it dropped to 4.5 percent before inching back up to 5.9 percent in April. In May, it jumped to 8.3 percent.

As of June 8, Humboldt County had confirmed 4,390 cases, with 192 hospitalizations and 46 confirmed COVID-19 related deaths.

The county dashboard listed 4,246 people as having “recovered” from the virus locally, though that just means they are no longer contagious and does not account for long-term health impacts, which local healthcare workers have told the Journal can be substantial, even in previously healthy patients.

Nationwide, more than 33.1 million COVID-19 cases had been confirmed, with 594,802 related deaths, according to the Centers for Disease Control. In California, more than 3.6 million cases had been confirmed with 62,479 deaths, according to the Department of Public Health.

Auditor-Controller Investigation: The Humboldt County Board of Supervisors voted 4-1 in a special closed session, with Fifth District Supervisor Steve Madrone dissenting, to hire an independent, third-party to investigate allegations of workplace misconduct and delayed payments by the Auditor-Controller’s Office. Free Rapid Testing Kits: Humboldt County Public health recently announced that organizations and businesses are eligible to receive rapid COVID-19 antigen test kits at no cost through the California Testing Task Force. The tests, which give results in 15 to 30 minutes, are most useful for the routine testing of a workforce, entry into a gathering or congregate setting. Read more at www.northcoast-journal.com. Open Vaccine Appointments: The Humboldt County Joint Information Center is reporting that scores of COVID-19 vaccine appointments remain open throughout the county. ‘Policing our Own’

The story of reinstated sheriff’s Sgt. Jason Daniels and why holding problematic officers accountable is harder than it seems

By the time Jason Daniels was criminally charged in 2014 with committing rape and sexual battery while on patrol as a Humboldt County Sheriff’s Office deputy, he’d already been “separated from his employment,” as the county put it.

And as the case wound its way through court, local headlines all had a familiar refrain: “Ex-sergeant’s Sexual Assault Case Gets February Prelim Date,” “Ex-deputy Gets Day in Court,” “Alleged Sexual Assault Victim Testifies Against Former HumCo Sheriff’s Sergeant Jason Daniels” and, finally, “Former HCSO Sgt. Jason Daniels Found Not Guilty.” But five years after the last of those headlines, Jason Daniels has his job back — technically anyway, though he is no longer working as a law enforcement officer — despite the county having spent more than $240,000 on outside attorneys in personnel actions involving the case. While Daniels is not currently working or receiving a regular paycheck, he holds one of the Humboldt County Sheriff’s Office’s 17 sergeant positions on paper, apparently after an independent arbitrator reversed the county’s decision to “separate” him from his employment.

Public sector personnel actions are largely kept strictly confidential, and even more so with police officers, who enjoy not only enhanced due process protections but also specific laws guarding their disciplinary proceedings — and outcomes — from public view. As such, the county is legally limited in what it can say about Daniels’ situation, and Daniels himself declined several attempts to be interviewed for this story, so exactly what happened remains murky.

But information gleaned through a series of California Public Records Act requests offers a basic outline and, amid an upwelling of demands for police officer accountability nationally in the wake of George Floyd’s murder and locally as the Eureka Police Department texting scandal unfolds in real time, Daniels’ case has reverberations in all directions. For those advocating for police reform, it’s a sobering reminder of the degree to which state laws are designed to protect officers and keep their alleged transgressions secret. For municipalities calculating the potential liabilities of personnel actions, it can be seen as a warning of just how wrong things can go. And for police chiefs and sheriffs clamoring for more authority to fire and discipline their officers, well, Jason Daniels might be seen as a prime example of how California law is overprotective of officers and their disciplinary records.

Humboldt County Sheriff William Honsal said he’s legally very limited in what he can say publicly about Daniels’ case, so said very little about it specifically. But speaking generally, he said California needs to shift toward a system that either gives agencies more leeway to fire problematic officers or creates a statewide system for decertifying bad actors.

“If we are to be able to police our own — which is what the public is begging for, what they want — we need the tools to do so,” he said. “If we identify a law enforcement officer who has moral issues, integrity issues or racist issues, a law enforcement executive should be able to fire those people so they don’t carry a badge and don’t carry this awesome power that’s afforded to peace officers.”

By all public accounts, Jason Scott Daniels’ career had been successful. A local product, he’d graduated from Eureka High School and the College of the Redwoods Police Academy before being hired on as a police officer, first in Trinidad then in Blue Lake. He was hired as a deputy sheriff in 2000 and promoted to sergeant in 2011, serving as a field training officer, a member of the county gang task force and crisis negotiation team, and had been supervising a graveyard shift for several years.

In April of 2013, he was honored by the Humboldt County Board of Supervisors for saving a suicidal 21-year-old woman. She’d been standing on a 2-inch ledge on the Willow Creek Bridge, about 75 feet above a rocky river bar, and Daniels had been negotiating with her for 90 minutes when she leaned just a bit closer to him and he grabbed her by the hair and pulled her over the railing to safety. In an interview with the Times-Standard, Daniels was dismissive of the award and any hero talk: “It’s just what we do,” he said.

Six months later, at about 5:30 a.m. on Oct. 18, 2013, investigators with the Humboldt County District Attorney’s Office called Daniels down to the jail, saying there was an issue with someone in custody there. When he arrived, they placed him under arrest on suspicion of raping a woman while on duty two months earlier. The Humboldt County Sheriff’s Office immediately placed Daniels on administrative leave and four months later, after an internal investigation, he was “separated from county service.” In the aftermath of Daniels’ arrest, another woman came forward to allege he’d sexually battered her during a traffic stop on March 13, 2013, pulling down her pants and fondling her against her will.

Roughly a year after Daniels’ arrest, the Humboldt County District Attorney’s Office filed a three-count felony complaint charging him with sexually penetrating Jane Doe 1 with a foreign object against her will and sexually battering her while she was unlawfully restrained Aug. 29, 2013, as well as a separate charge of sexually battering Jane Doe 2 during the March 13 traffic stop.

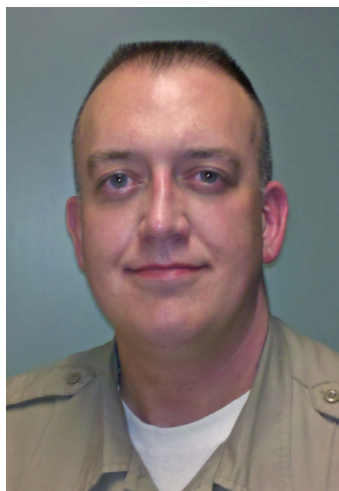

When the case came to trial in 2016, Daniels' defense attorneys — Steven Betz and Julia Fox of the high-powered firm Rains Lucia Stern, PC, paid for through the law enforcement Legal Defense Fund — focused on inconsistencies in the stories of both women, highlighting their years-long struggles with substance abuse and Jane Doe 1's work as a prostitute, calling their allegations "a story concocted by two con artists to try and squeeze money out of the county and the system." Prosecutors countered that Daniels had chosen to assault these women precisely because they "were very vulnerable victims" and that while some details of their stories had been inconsistent, both had consistently maintained that Daniels assaulted them against their will.

Ultimately, a jury of seven women and five men voted to acquit Daniels of all charges, with some later saying the prosecution hadn't presented enough evidence to prove the charges beyond a reasonable doubt.

After trial, court filings revealed that a judge had barred prosecutors from presenting character evidence they felt buttressed the criminal charges, finding it wasn't directly relevant to the alleged crimes and risked unduly prejudicing the jury. According to court documents, this evidence included an empty condom box and a methamphetamine pipe found in the trunk of Daniels' patrol car, a witness who said she'd had consensual sex with Daniels while he was on duty and some 700 inappropriate text messages allegedly found on his cell phone, many shared among "co-workers, including those of lower ranking working at the sheriff's office."

Specifically, the texts allegedly included terms ranging from the sexually crass (boobies, boner, vag) and sexist (bitch, cunt, slut, whore) to the racist (nigger, dot head) and homophobic (fag, gay-ass), according to the documents.

While then Sheriff Mike Downey confirmed at the time there was an internal affairs investigations into the text messages, he declined to say how many employees received them, if any of Daniels' subordinates reported them to a supervisor and whether any disciplinary action was taken against any of those involved beyond Daniels. Downey did say, however, that his department had implemented additional tolerance training in the aftermath of the investigation, sending an unspecified number of employees to take courses at the Simon Wiesenthal Center for Tolerance in Los Angeles.

But when it comes to Daniels' "separation" from county employment, it's unclear exactly what alleged misconduct that was based on. When the Journal recently filed a California Public Records Act request with the county seeking documentation of Daniels' misconduct under Senate Bill 1421 — which requires departments to disclose sustained findings of officers' dishonesty or sexual misconduct with members of the public — the county said it had no responsive documents.

Immediately following Daniels' acquittal, the Times-Standard asked Betz about his client's future plans. The attorney said he did not know, "other than moving on with his life."

It now appears moving on included fighting the county — successfully — to get his old job back. Much about this fight is shielded from public view, due to laws that keep many personnel records secret, especially police officer disciplinary records, and Daniels and his attorney declining to be interviewed for this story. But we do know from a public records act request that the matter went to arbitration.

State laws — known collectively as the Police Officers Procedural Bill of Rights — afford police officers a bevy of due process protections that are beyond the reach of most employees. The rights ensure that officers aren't disciplined absent an investigation and a sustained finding of wrongdoing. They guarantee officers access to representation — often through the deep pockets of the Police Officers Research Association of California's Legal Defense Fund, which is funded by union contributions from officers throughout the state — and require that officers be advised of the allegations facing them and given an opportunity to prepare for interrogation. Further, the rights guarantee that the interrogation be conducted in a specific manner, with only one officer questioning the accused at a time, and that any investigation be completed within one year.

When a department issues a final notice of discipline, officers also have the opportunity to appeal, which takes different forms in different municipalities based on union contracts and personnel rules. For example, if a Eureka officer wants to challenge a disciplinary action, that appeal is heard by a city personnel board, whose decision would then be again appealable to the Eureka City Council. In the county, the process is governed by Humboldt County Merit System Rules, which hold that disciplinary appeals be heard by a panel of three people — the employee gets to choose one, the Humboldt County Board of Supervisors gets to choose another and those two panelists choose the third member, who then serves as its chair.

But the rules also hold that “upon mutual agreement” of the panelists chosen by the county and the employee, a hearing officer — in this case an arbitrator — can be brought in to decide the appeal “in lieu” of the panel. This appears to be what happened in Daniels’ case. When a case goes to arbitration, a statewide mediation entity offers a list of five or seven arbitrators who can hear a case and the employee and the county get to alternate crossing a name off the list until one remains, thus selecting them to hear the case.

The county declined to release any documents relating to arbitration hearings in the case, so it’s unclear when they were held, why the arbitrator didn’t uphold Daniels’ “separation” of employment or whether they imposed any discipline at all. But billing records related to “outside counsel or consultants in personnel matters involving” Daniels indicate the process was both lengthy and costly.

The county contracted with Liebert Cassidy Whitmore, which bills itself as the state’s premier labor and employment law firm, and ran up a bill of more than $244,000 from April 30, 2014 through Nov. 30, 2020. The bulk of that — $149,000 — was billed in the second half of 2018. And while we don’t know when the arbitrator ruled in the case, we know they ultimately ruled in Daniels’ favor, reinstating his employment.

Honsal said he couldn’t comment on Daniels’ exact status with his department, but said he is no longer a “sworn peace officer.”

“He is filling a sergeant position on paper but he is not an active sworn peace officer with the sheriff’s office,” he wrote in an email to the Journal.

County payroll records seem to confirm this. Under the California Records Act, the Journal requested documentation of any payments the county has made to Daniels since Oct. 1, 2013. In response, the county released records from June 19, 2020 through May 7, and none shows Daniels working any hours. (A follow up inquiry as to why the county didn’t release earlier payroll records did not get a response from county Human Resources Director Linda Le by deadline.)

Transparent California, a database of public employee salaries and pensions, shows Daniels hasn’t been paid by the county since 2014, when he received $11,321 in salary and a little more than $54,000 in “other pay,” which would fit his being on paid administrative leave through the first two months of the year and then getting paid out for any accrued vacation and sick time in a final check.

But the records released by the county for 2020 and 2021 show that Daniels, despite not working any hours, has received some payments. On June 19, 2020, he received a “gross adjustment” of $95,110 and on Sept. 25, 2020, he received a direct deposit of $13,227, though it’s unclear for what, as Le did not respond to Journal requests to clarify the records. Then, on Dec. 4, 2020, Daniels received a pre-tax payment of $53,245 under the line item “4850 Time,” an apparent reference to California Labor Code section 4850, which provides up to one year of leave at full pay and no tax deductions when a police officer is temporarily totally disabled due to an industrial injury.

According to the county, Daniels has not submitted any claims for damages or entered into any settlement agreements related to his employment.

Speaking generally about police disciplinary processes and not about Daniels’ case specifically, Honsal said that when an arbitrator orders the county to reverse an officer’s firing, the county is obligated to take them back as an employee but they would have to be “fit for duty” to return to their job as a police officer under Government Code section 1031, which mandates officers be “of good moral character,” free of emotional and mental conditions — including race, ethnicity or gender-based biases — that might adversely affect their exercising police powers and being physically fit for duty.

“If they don’t meet some of those requirements, whether it be health or moral aptitude or psychological review, the county has to figure out what to do with that person,” Honsal said, explaining that could involve finding another position to place the employee in.

In Daniels’ case, it’s unclear if the county would be able to find another er position for him or would look to negotiate some kind of settlement that would again “separate” him from county employment. According to labor law experts consulted by the Journal, such a settlement would likely have to include all or some percentage of seven years of back pay at a sergeant’s salary due to the arbitrator’s reinstating his employment, as well as credits for his pension through the California Public Employee Retirement System.

Asked specifically about the impact of having one of his department’s 17 sergeant positions filled by someone on paper only, Honsal said it’s problematic.

“I need every position filled,” he said, adding that having another active sergeant would allow him to have enhanced supervision of deputies in the field or to fill a position dedicated to recruiting and training. “I need every single one of my positions.”

Amid the national discussion of police officer accountability, arbitrators have become a flash point. In the circles of rank and file officers, they are often seen as a crucial, unbiased check against local police chiefs and sheriffs, who may be unduly guided by petty grudges or public pressures. But to the public — and sometimes law enforcement executives — they are often seen as impediments to officer accountability.

In a groundbreaking study of 624 arbitration cases heard between 2006 and 2020 from “a diverse range of law enforcement agencies” across the country, Stephen Rushin, an associate professor at Loyola University Chicago School of Law, found that arbitrators more often than not rule in favor of officers. Overall, Rushin found that in 52 percent of cases the arbitrator reduced or overturned police officer discipline and in 46 percent of cases involving termination, they ordered departments to rehire previously fired officers. When the punishment in question was a suspension, Rushin found arbitrators on average reduced them by “approximately 49 percent.” Looking at arbitrators’ justifications for their rulings, Rushin found some trends.

“Frequently, arbitrators found the original discipline to be excessive relative to the offense committed or relative to punishments received by other officers,” he wrote. “In a somewhat smaller number of cases, arbitrators cited insufficient evidence or procedural flaws in the investigation or adjudication of the original internal disciplinary process.”

As Rushin notes in his study, arbitrators are frequently sticklers for process, so they want to see how a disciplinary action compares with others meted out by a department, they want to see signs of progressive discipline — meaning an officer has received warnings or incremental discipline when there are patterns of misconduct — and they want to make sure their due process rights were protected during the investigation.

“Arbitrators follow due process as closely as the judicial standard,” Arnold Zack, former president of the National Academy of Arbitrators and a lecturer at Harvard Law School, told U.S. News & World Report in 2016. “It is more important to have the process operating properly, even at the price of an inequity in a particular case. That overrides the bad apples.”

Speaking generally, Honsal said that’s a problem in a climate when trust in law enforcement is in question and the public is clamoring for accountability.

“We have to have that public trust, so we have to have the ability to weed out those who have some major character issues and can’t be rehabilitated,” he said, adding that the extensive background investigation process in police officer hiring processes are specifically designed to identify applicants with character flaws. “The public doesn’t want those people wearing a badge. If it’s an issue that would prevent someone from being hired in the first place, why should they be able to keep their job after having those same issues on duty?”

Currently working its way through the Legislature, Senate Bill 2 attempts to address the issue by creating an advisory board of both members of the public and law enforcement to review allegations of officer misconduct and consider revoking an officer’s certification. But the bill also goes much further, limiting the qualified immunity that protects officers from civil litigation and Honsal said he does not support it. (The bill’s author, state Sen. Steven Bradford, says the limits on qualified immunity are necessary to allow families to seek justice when their rights have been violated.)

In an August 2020 article in the California Law Review, six experts on arbitration proceedings in the state, meanwhile, argued that making arbitration proceedings and police disciplinary records public would go a long way toward reforming the system. They also advocated changing evidence standards in appeals hearings so that minor due process violations don’t preclude holding officers accountable if the violation is “a harmless error without prejudice to the merits of the officer’s case.”

Frustration evident in his voice, Honsal said he’s seen protests locally and across the nation demanding officers be held to account for malfeasance. He said he understands the anger and the mistrust, as well as the need for due process rights and officer protections. California leads the nation in innovative law enforcement training and practices, he said, and the Legislature needs to find a way — either through a decertification panel or giving local chiefs and sheriffs more autonomy — to allow officers to be disciplined for misconduct in a way that engenders public trust.

But the sheriff made clear he thinks the current system is not working. Asked if there have been instances when he’s felt hamstrung in his ability to discipline or dismiss an officer for conduct he felt was inappropriate, Honsal didn’t pause. “Yes,” he said. ●

Wrapping Up Zongzi

Sticky rice dumplings for the Dragon Boat Festival

By Wendy Chan

onthetable@northcoastjournal.com

Zongzi (sticky rice dumplings) are a classic treat to celebrate the Dragon Boat Festival for Chinese all over the world. This festival falls on the fifth day of the fifth lunar month and when I was growing up in China, I always looked forward to it. There was so much preparation for making the dumplings back then. First, the kids helped to separate the regular rice from glutinous rice. When we grew our rice, a small percentage of regular rice was mixed in with the glutinous rice, so we had to separate it out grain by grain. I had better eyesight back then. It sounds like a difficult job but we didn't have games to play and it was fun competing with my siblings.

Then my grandma and mom would prepare the bamboo leaves and the weed straws, marinate the pork belly, shell the peanuts and crack the salted duck eggs for yolks. Finally, they sat down in the kitchen with the door wide open — it was hot and humid in the south during June — and started making the dumplings. I was only allowed to watch them wrap but I wished I had persuaded them to let me try. The long hours of boiling them over the firebox stove filled the house with their aroma. I could hardly wait to take the first bite, sweet, savory, aromatic and comforting.

I learned how to make them after I came to the states. My mom showed me how to wrap them a few times. Mine never came out as neat as hers but I'm much faster. I have to say, sticky rice dumplings are the treat I'm most proud to make for family and friends. My mom even agreed my dumplings, with their own style and a little craziness, taste better than her old countryside version. I make them often since I can get the ingredients easily. For years, my boys liked to take them for school lunch and introduced them to their friends. That made me so happy.

I have always wanted to celebrate this tradition with others here, and this year the Dragon Boat Festival falls on June 14. I'm going to teach a class on making zongzi and sell some for a fundraiser for the Jefferson Community Center and the Boys & Girls Club of the Redwoods. Zongzi are labor intensive and time-consuming, but with a few of my Chinese friends' help and the support from the community, it'll be a success.

Country Zongzi

Makes about 12 dumplings. Dumplings can be refrigerated or frozen. For best results, reheat by boiling them for 15 minutes.

Ingredients:

40 or more dried bamboo leaves (3 leaves per dumplings, with extra in case of breakage)
A roll of good cotton twine
6 cups uncooked glutinous rice
1 cup raw skin-on peanuts
6 salted duck egg yolks (optional), whole or halved
1 pound pork belly, cut into 12 pieces
3 Chinese sausages, cut into 12 pieces
12 dried shrimp, soaked
2 shallots, sliced
Salt
Soy sauce
Dark soy sauce
Sugar
Rice wine (at least 40 percent ABV)
Vegetable oil
Chinese five-spice
1 inch fresh ginger, sliced

Start prepping the filling and leaves a day ahead.

First, marinate the pork belly with 1 teaspoon of salt, 2 teaspoons of soy sauce, 1 teaspoon of dark soy sauce, 2 teaspoons of rice wine, 3 slices of ginger and ½ teaspoon five spice. Cover and refrigerate overnight.

Second, soak the bamboo leaves in a large pot of hot water. Make sure all the leaves are submerged by placing a heavy object, like a plate or bowl, on the top of them. Leave them soaking overnight.

Third, rinse the rice and peanuts together, drain the water and place them in a bowl. Add 2 teaspoons salt, 2 teaspoons rice wine, 1 teaspoon sugar and 1 teaspoon oil. Mix well and set aside overnight.

Fourth, sauté the shrimp and shallots with 1 teaspoon of oil for few minutes. Once cooled, cover and refrigerate them overnight.

Finally, toss the egg yolks with 1 tablespoon of rice wine and refrigerate.

The next day, drain the water from the leaves. Use a soft cloth to wipe each leaf and rinse them with warm water. Trim off ½ inch to square off both ends of the leaves. Discard any ripped leaves — that's why you always have few extra. Clear a workspace and set out the filling ingredients, twine and a pair of scissors, and get ready to wrap.

To assemble the zongzi:

This method starts by layering the bamboo to make a larger surface area, then folding it twice to form a sturdy cone. Then you'll fill the cone and seal the dumpling with folds on the remaining two sides to form a rectangular pillow to be tied up with twine. Go to www.northcoastjournal.com for step-by-step photos of the process.

To begin: Place 2 leaves side by side, shiny side up, overlapping about ½ inch. Pick them up together horizontally in your left hand. With your left hand under the leaves, pinch and fold them once in the middle. Turn the leaves so the folded edge is closest to you and the tips of the leaves are pointing away from you. Seal the right side by making a ¾-inch fold lengthwise along the right edge. The leaves are now sealed by folds on two sides, forming a little pocket or cone.

Keeping a good hold on the pointed bottom of the cone with your left hand, use your right hand to put about ⅓ cup of the rice and peanut mixture in the pocket. Add 1 slice of pork belly, 1 piece of sausage, 1 dried shrimp with shallots and 1 whole or halved egg yolk (optional) in the center. Cover the filling with another ⅓ cup of the rice mixture. Pack the stuffing down gently.

With your left hand holding the cone upward, use your other hand to pick up a third leaf and place it alongside the top leaf, overlapping, to make the pocket's wall higher. With your right hand, fold the top ¾ inch of the edge of the third leaf down, parallel to your second fold. This will seal a third side of your dumpling. Now the dumpling is only open on the top, where the ends of the leaves are pointing. Use your right hand to tightly fold the leaf ends downward to completely close the dumpling. Keep a firm hold over the last fold with your left hand so the dumpling stays together. Use your right hand to pull a length of twine. Hold one end of the string against the back of the dumpling with your left hand and use your right hand to wrap it around and around the dumpling several times. Make sure it's secured top to bottom before you cut out the twine and tie a knot. It should look like a pillow. Continue filling and wrapping the dumplings.

Once the dumplings are all tied up, put them in a large pot and fill it with warm water, make sure all the dumplings are submerged, leaving room to add more water later on. Bring the pot to a rapid boil for 30 minutes. Lower the heat to medium and continue to boil for another 2 ½ hours. The rice will absorb water during cooking, so check the pot periodically, adding hot water from a kettle as needed to keep the dumplings covered. If using an Instant Pot, it usually takes about 1 hour and 20 minutes.

Once they are cooked, carefully take the dumplings out and place them in a colander. I like to rinse with warm water to get rid of any grease. Enjoy them warm or room temperature.

You can find Home Cooking with Wendy Chan (she/her) classes benefitting local charities on Facebook, as well as tickets for the June 12 fundraiser ($20) benefitting the Jefferson Community Center and Boys & Girls Club of the Redwoods.

Humboldt Crabs Back With a Bang, Winning First Series

By Thomas Lal

getout@northcoastjournal.com

Baseball and beer are back at the Arcata Ballpark as the Humboldt Crabs are up to their usual winning ways to get the season started, taking two out of three games against the visiting Lincoln Potters to win their first series.

For the first time since 2019, fans were welcomed back into the ballpark at limited capacity to watch the Crabs play baseball after taking a season off due to COVID-19. With Friday and Saturday's games sold out before gates opened, the Crabs' faithful were clearly ready to get back to what they do best; heckle the visitors, enjoy some libations, and watch some classic summer baseball.

The Crabs dropped their first game of the season 5-9 to the Potters after giving up runs late in the eighth and ninth innings in what was otherwise a close offensive game. Cade Van Allen got the first start for the Crabs and held the Potters scoreless until the fourth inning after the team took a 2-0 lead in the first inning. The Humboldt bats fell silent for much of the middle innings and despite tying the game at 5-5 in the seventh, the Crabs couldn't hold the lead even with the strong start Van Allen provided.

Where the Crabs did struggle on opening night was the defensive side of matters, with three errors on the night and several other miscues in the infield. While the somewhat shaky play may have concerned fans on Friday night, the team only practiced together for the first time on Wednesday, just two days before the season started, and fortunately the defense did improve as the weekend progressed.

Game two of the season was a much more defensively sound affair for the Crabs and their pitching staff as they held the Potters to just a single run with starting pitcher Cole Tremain putting in five solid Teammates congratulate Crabs second baseman Ethan Fischel after he hit the game-winning RBI in the bottom of the 13th inning to give the Humboldt Crabs their first series win of the season with a 5-4 win over the Lincoln Potters in the third game of the series at Arcata.

innings of work without giving up a run before handing the ball over to teammate Manny Casillas. In the end it was a comfortable win, with the Crabs only giving up a solo home run to Potters second baseman CJ Valdez in the sixth inning while already leading.

If the second game of the season was comfortable, the third was anything but, as a marathon effort by both teams would last until the 13th inning on Sunday afternoon. The Potters put up four runs on Crabs starting pitcher Owen Stevenson in the first two innings but didn't score again for the rest of the day as Stevenson pitched into the sixth inning before giving the ball to a bullpen that gave up only three hits for the rest of the game.

Eureka local Ethan Fischel was the hero of the day as he knocked in the winning run, ending a seven-inning deadlock to secure the game and the series with a line drive that dropped into center field perfectly between the outfielder and the second baseman for the Potters, before being swarmed by his teammates.

Having grown up watching the Crabs and going to camps as a kid, Fischel said it was a dream come true to play for the team.

"I went to Crabs Camp my entire life," Fischel said. "Always came out to the games. You know you grow up in Humboldt and as a baseball player — you always want to play for them, so it's a dream come true."

"It feels great," Fischel said after the game. "I mean the pitchers were absolutely amazing after going down four runs in the first two innings and then 10 innings of scoreless baseball from the pitching staff. It was outstanding. So they kept us in it and I was just happy enough to end it."

Luckily for fans, they had even more to cheer for from the local side of things as fellow Humboldt local Aidan Morris put up a multi-hit game going 2-for-3 with a double and scoring a run as well as making an impressive diving play to record an out in foul territory in the third inning.

"The fans have been awesome, as always," Morris said about being back in Humboldt to play for the Crabs for a second season. "Always being loud, always in the game. It's a great time."

After a slow start to the season on Friday and sitting out Saturday night, Morris came into Sunday hoping to change things up and make some more noise around the bases.

"I had a slow game out on Friday and I just wanted to come out here and bang the ball around a little bit and have some fun," Morris said.

For Crabs Manager Robin Guiver, it was a good feeling to be back at the ballpark with a new group of players to settle in for a full season.

"It was a long year being away," Guiver said on Sunday after the game. "It's just great to see the Arcata Ballpark come back to life doing our thing, so it's awesome. We're really happy to be back on the field."

With the Potters having not lost a game until they came into Arcata, it was always going to be a steep learning curve for the Crabs with such short build up, but Guiver was happy to have taken the first series of the year.

"Lincoln is a really quality team, they're good," Guiver said. "After losing opening night, I knew we were going to have a battle on our hands trying to get any wins. And to get two out of three was a sweet way to end the weekend."

Break in the Wind Puts Boats Back on the Water

By Kenny Priest

fishing@northcoastjournal.com

The wind and seas finally relented Tuesday, allowing the Eureka-based fleet of boats to get back on the water. A few of the boats went south, reacquainting themselves with Cape Mendocino. The majority had halibut on their minds and headed north to 250 feet of water. Reports coming from the charter boats were good, with limits or close to for most. That's good news as the bite had really slowed prior to the last blow. The ocean looks plenty fishable for the next few days, although the dreaded south wind will rear its ugly head beginning Thursday and stick around through the weekend.

Weekend marine forecast

After a few nice days, the winds will shift to the south starting Thursday. Friday's forecast is calling for 5 to 15 knot winds out of the south and waves southwest 6 feet at 10 seconds. Saturday looks a little better, with south winds up to 5 knots and waves west 6 feet at 11 seconds. Sunday looks similar, with southwest winds up to 5 knots and west waves 5 feet at 11 seconds. These conditions can and will change by the weekend. For an up-to-date weather forecast, visit www.weather.gov/eureka/ or www.windy.com. To monitor the latest Humboldt bar conditions, visit www.wrh.noaa.gov/eka/swan. You can also call the National Weather Service at 443-7062 or the office on Woodley Island at 443-6484.

The Oceans:

Trinidad

Tony Sepulveda of Shellback Sport Fishing reports last week was strong for fishing out of Trinidad. "We lost this Monday due to weather but that was the first one in almost two weeks," he said. "Our remote waters bottom fish trips have been kicking limits of jumbo rockfish with lots of color. Canaries, coppers, reds, yellowtail, quillback and tigers have been in the daily mix with limits of lingcod up to 30 pounds being the norm. Closer to Trinidad Head, the Pacific halibut bite has been on fire. Limits are the norm, which is always special on these elusive fish. Most have been in the 15-pound range but we had quite a few over 30 this week, topped by a 58 pounder."

Shelter Cove

Choppy ocean conditions caused by stiff winds out of Shelter Cove kept boats from launching over the weekend, according to Jake Mitchell of Sea Hawk Sport Fishing. "We only made it out twice last week," said Mitchell. "Conditions were decent last Wednesday and we made it down to Bear Harbor and put in rockfish limits by 9:30 a.m. The lingcod bite was tough and we ended the day with only five. We made it back out on Friday in tough conditions and boated quick limits of rockfish before we were chased off the water at 9:30 a.m. The weekend saw big white caps all the way to the beach. We finally made it back out on Tuesday and headed to Gorda for halibut. We spent a good part of the day with nothing to show for it. We threw in the towel and went rock fishing and had limits, including lings, in about an hour."

Crescent City

The rockfish and lingcod bite continues to be excellent out of Crescent City, reports Britt Carson of Crescent City's Englund Marine. "Quite a few boats are fishing both the north and south reefs as well as near the Point St. George Lighthouse," said Carson. "The Pacific halibut bite was slow this week, with only one reportedly caught. During the last round of minus tides, the razor clam diggers did very well. There doesn't appear to be a shortage, though they are on the small side. Minus tides returned on Tuesday and will run through next Wednesday. The redbait perch has been really good at Kellogg Beach. The beach is loaded with sand crabs. The California halibut is still non-existent but effort remains very low."

Brookings

Ocean salmon season begins Saturday out of Brookings, according to Andy Martin of Brookings Fishing Charters.

Paul Malay, of Lovelock, Nevada, landed this nice lingcod Friday while fishing out of Trinidad aboard the Shellback.

"Only hatchery silvers can be kept June 12 through 18, and then wild and hatchery kings and hatchery coho can be kept June 12 through mid-August," said Martin. "Commercial trollers are catching a few kings in deeper water out of Brookings. With lots of anchovies in close, expect some salmon to be caught near the buoys during this weekend's opener, although the best fishing in early June is typically 3 miles offshore in 200 feet of water. The coho will likely be in the top 40 feet of water. Rockfish action has been good, despite windy weather. Lingcod fishing has slowed the past week out of Brookings."

Lower Rogue

Salmon have made a sudden, and early, showing in the Rogue Bay, reports Martin. "Water temperatures near Agness hit 70 degrees late last week, forcing the tail end of the spring salmon run to hold up in the bay," said Martin. "Nearly a dozen kings were caught on Saturday by the handful of boat trolling in front of Jot's Resort. Expect kings to trickle into the bay throughout the month, before the fall run builds in August."

*The Conjuring 3:
The Devil Made Me Do It*

By Jennifer Fumiko Cahill

jennifer@northcoastjournal.com

Feeling cute, might break a Satanic curse later. The Conjuring 3: The Devil Made Me Do It

REVIEWS

THE CONJURING 3: THE DEVIL MADE ME DO IT. When The Exorcist (1977) aired on television in 1980, I watched it from the cracked pleather recliner I was still small enough to share with my grandmother, who loved supernatural horror and evidently didn't put much stock in movie ratings. It was even more terrifying than the hauntings and vampires that were our usual fare, but it wasn't until I saw it again as a teenager, after her death, that I began to feel its emotional weight. It was still scary but there was also guilt, worry, grief for a lost mother and the helplessness of watching someone you love suffer beyond your grasp. Possession was once — and in places still is — an explanation for mental illness, disease and addiction, among other things. Even now it makes for cathartic fantasy — the sort in which nightmarish loss of control and self can be undone with faith and love.

The universe of The Conjuring (2013) draws on the apocryphal real-life exploits of Ed and Lorraine Warren (self-proclaimed demonologist and medium, respectively), who investigated hauntings and possessions together. Horror writer and director James Wan has spun them into a web of films to rival Marvel's: a trio of Conjuring movies, the spinoff Anabelle (2014) with its own prequel and sequel, The Nun (2018) and The Curse of La Llorona (2019), another spinoff with Raymond Cruz as maybe my favorite deadpan priest ever. It's already a lot to catch up on for late starters and at least two more are in the works.

In the latest installment, we start with Ed and Lorraine (Patrick Wilson and Vera Farmiga) trying to wrest 8-year-old David (Julian Hilliard) from the clutches of a malevolent presence that has him twisting impossibly and nearly killing Ed with a heart attack. During the attempted exorcism, said spirit jumps into Arne (Ruairi O'Connor), the boyfriend of David's sister Debbie (Sarah Catherine Hook). Soon enough, a gaunt Arne is driven by hallucinations to commit murder, for which he's arrested and awaiting trial. Dinner with the Warrens and a tour of their souvenir collection (who keeps this shit?) are enough to emotionally scar his attorney and convince her to try a demonic possession defense. To gather supporting evidence, the Warrens do some supernatural detective work — searching for a missing student, reading up on Satanic rituals, consulting a retired exorcist (John Noble) — to root out the source of what appears to be a curse.

With a script by David Leslie Johnson-McGoldrick and story by Wan, director Michael Chaves, who helmed La Llorona, carries on the canonical tone of creeping dread punctuated by sudden scares, blinding light against shadow, simple but awful apparitions and a focus on the visceral power of sharp objects, sweat and filth. Add to that an unflinching reproduction of 1981 sets (harvest gold appliances!) and costuming that includes a collection of belts, prairie blouses and long skirts that will challenge even stalwart vintage fashion enthusiasts. (Gen Z, heed my warning: These pleated trousers are cursed.) The only break in atmosphere is a flashback to the Warren's chaste teen courtship, which is all Nicholas Sparks lighting and gazebos.

The supporting cast is solid enough, if a little forgettable, but the effortlessly weird Noble is a treat. But the heart of the movie is the bond between the Warrens, which Farmiga and Wilson play with the same understatement as Lorraine's clairvoyance. Instead of the usual chemistry, what we feel is their worry, their mutual protectiveness, whether over Ed's physical frailty or Lorraine's vulnerability when connecting to the dead and demonic, and their unquestioned shared purpose. The Warrens don't anchor themselves in God or the Catholic Church (whose own horrors are absent here) so much as each other. In at least this branch of The Conjuring's universe, a crucifix, a rosary and a Bible passage can hold evil back a moment, but it's the bond between this couple that pulls the possessed back from the edge. Eclipse of the Super Flower Moon

ncnightlights@northcoastjournal.com

The full moon of May, called the Flower Moon, was a real doozy: It was a super moon, an eclipse and a blood moon — the first Super Blood Flower Moon into which I can ever remember having tuned. So how does it come by all of those monikers?

The moon's orbit around Earth is elliptical, which means that sometimes the moon is closer to Earth than at other times. When the full moon coincides with the moon's closest approach, called perigee, the full moon is called a super moon, and naturally, being closer, it is a slightly larger full moon than otherwise.

Blood Moon is a term referring to the deep reddish-orange that the moon becomes during a total lunar eclipse, which we saw on May 26. A total lunar eclipse occurs when the moon passes directly through the densest part of the shadow the sun casts behind Earth. The plane in which the moon orbits Earth is offset from the plane about which the Earth orbits the sun, so it isn't often that Earth, the moon and sun line up this way. When the three celestial bodies line up with the moon behind Earth, the moon passes into Earth's shadow and is eclipsed.

Cameras see the world differently from you or I, and sometimes what they capture is either beyond what we can see or else it falls far short of what we see with our own eyes. I call those phenomena the camera's superpowers and limitations. It is possible to capture photographs that do not closely resemble what we saw with our flesh and blood eyes. So which was reality: what we saw, or what the camera saw? I tend to say either or both, for our realities are a matter of perception and seeing things in new ways is useful.

But what about the moon? It ran into a severe limitation of the camera and became overexposed, not looking the way I saw it at all. To my eye that morning as I photographed beside the road, the eclipsed moon glowed a beautiful amber-red, bright enough to easily see color and detail. But to the camera, which was set to capture the much darker landscape and night sky, the lighter moon became a featureless bright white spot in the sky. The camera was not able to capture both the relatively bright eclipsed moon, the dark landscape and faint Milky Way all at once because the difference in brightness values between the darkest and lightest elements was simply too great. Its superpower of seeing into the darkness did not allow it to see both the dark landscape and bright moon at once, and the moon became too bright.

I wanted to bring home the full eclipse experience I'd had, with the moon the way I had seen it and the Milky Way accompanying it with the landscape visible beneath it. To do so, I made a second exposure in which the moon looked normal. But though the moon looked good in this one, now the sky and landscape were nearly completely black, much darker than even my naked eye had seen it. My solution was to use the moon from that image on top of the too-bright moon in the photo of the landscape and sky. Now my image of the Super Flower Blood Moon eclipse of May 26 more closely resembles what I saw that early morning.

I had to work at it to bring you the eclipse as I'd seen it. A single snapshot couldn't do it. Some might say I should have left the sky black and had a normal-looking moon. Some might say I should have left the moon a bright white spot with the Milky Way and landscape as you see here. Neither of those is what I saw, though. I chose to share this. ●

NOTICE OF PROPERTY TAX DELINQUENCY AND IMPENDING DEFAULT

Revenue and Taxation Code Section 3351, 3352
I, John Bartholomew, Humboldt County Tax Collector, State of California, certify as follows:

That at close of business on June 30, 2021 by operation of law, any real property (unless previously tax-defaulted and not redeemed) that have any delinquent taxes, assessments, or other charges levied for the fiscal year 2020-21, and/or any delinquent supplemental taxes levied prior to the fiscal year 2020-21 shall be declared tax-defaulted.

That unless the tax defaulted property is completely redeemed through payment of all unpaid amounts, together with penalties and fees prescribed by law or an installment plan is initiated and maintained; the property may be sold subsequently at a tax sale to satisfy the tax lien.

That a detailed list of all properties remaining tax-defaulted at the close of business on June 30, 2021, and not redeemed prior to being submitted for publication, shall be published on or before September 8, 2021.

That information concerning redemption or the initiation of an installment plan of redemption of tax-defaulted property will be furnished, upon request, by John Bartholomew, Humboldt County Tax Collector at 825 5th Street, Room 125, Eureka, California 95501 (707)476-2450.

I certify or (declare), under penalty of perjury, that the foregoing is true and correct.

John Bartholomew
Humboldt County Tax Collector

Executed at Eureka, Humboldt County, California, on May 15th, 2021. Published in the North Coast Journal on May 20th, May 27th and June 3rd, 2021

NOTICE OF IMPENDING POWER TO SELL
TAX-DEFAULTED PROPERTY

Revenue and Taxation Code Section 3361, 3362
Pursuant to Revenue and Taxation Code 3691 and 3692.4, the following conditions will, by operation of law, subject real property to the Tax Collector's power to sell.

1) All property for which property taxes and assessments have been in default for five or more years.

Note: The power to sell schedule for nonresidential commercial property is three or more years of tax-defaulted status, unless the county adopts, by ordinance or resolution, the five-year tax default schedule.

2) All property that has a nuisance abatement lien recorded against it and for which property taxes and assessments have been in default for three or more years.

3) Any property that has been identified and requested for purchase by a city, county, city and county or nonprofit organization to serve the public benefit by providing housing or services directly related to low-income persons and for which property taxes and assessments have been in default for three or more years.

The parcels listed herein meet one or more of the criteria listed above and thus, will become subject to the Tax Collector's power to sell on July 1, 2021, at 12:01 a.m., by operation of law. The Tax Collector's power to sell will arise unless the property is either redeemed or made subject to an installment plan of redemption initiated as provided by law prior to close of business on the last business day in June. The right to an installment plan terminates on the last business day in June, and after that date the entire balance due must be paid in full to prevent sale of the property at public auction.

The right of redemption survives the property becoming subject to the power to sell, but it terminates at close of business on the last business day prior to the date of the sale by the Tax Collector.

All information concerning redemption or the initiation of an installment plan of redemption will be furnished, upon request, by John Bartholomew, Humboldt County Tax Collector, 825 5th Street, Room 125, Eureka, CA 95501, (707)476-2450.

The amount to redeem, including all penalties and fees, as of June 2021, is shown opposite the assessment/parcel number and next to the name of the assessee.

Yvette Jean Tucker

August 21,1946 - April 21, 2021

Yvette Jean Tucker passed away peacefully at her home in Eureka, California on April 21, 2021. Yvette will be remembered for her kindness and her gentle soul. She was a loyal friend that could be depended upon anytime, night or day. She was always there to help her fellow human beings and she had a special affection for her furry friends. When your birthday came around, you could always expect a singing telephone call.

Yvette was born in Sacramento, California, August 21,1946, to Mayo Lydia Deluis and Eugene Williamson. She graduated from from Bishop Armstrong High School in 1966. She earned a degree from Sacramento City College, and was a Brown Belt in Kenpo Karate. At the age of nineteen she married Richard Tucker, they had a child together in 1968. In 1974, Yvette and her young son, Sam, moved to Humboldt County. Yvette found relief in the cool weather that she encountered on the coast. She spent the rest of her days living in bliss behind the redwood curtain.

She began her working career in Humboldt at the Little Ponderosa Cafe in Rio Dell. Next she served the diners at the elegant Scotia Inn restaurant. Then she spent fifteen years as an administrative assistant at College of the Redwoods where she volunteered to be a Union representative for her colleagues. Yvette was a team player. Upon leaving College of the Redwoods, she transferred to the Humboldt County Planning Department. Yvette developed many friends in her work places, some of whom she continued to have relationships with after retirement. She was an enthusiastic volunteer at Tail Waggers Thrift Shop in Eureka supporting the Humboldt Humane Society.

Yvette had a huge love for books and was on the board of the Humboldt County Library which she enjoyed very much. She was also an avid participant in a penpal program through the Humboldt County Chapter of Big Sisters for many years.

Yvette was an active vendor in the monthly flea market events at the Redwood Acres Fairgrounds. She had a special interest in homemade crafts and beautiful one-of-a kind items. You could often find Yvette behind her ‘flea’ table crocheting. She loved to give away her creations to those in need. She had a great fondness for the people and the camaraderie at the flea market.

To think of Yvette is to remember her infectious laughter. The ring of her ‘mirthful cackle’ is echoing in the hearts of her loving friends.

Yvette was preceded in death by her brother John Williamson, and is survived by her son Samuel Tucker, her nephew Erik Willianson, his wife Teresa and their children Erik Pettitt, Kyrsten Lenore Williamson, Steven Rondone Williamson.

Free Will Astrology

Week of June 10, 2021

By Rob Brezsny

freewillastrology@freewillastrology.com

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Aries actor Leonard Nimoy became mega-famous by playing the role of Spock, an alien from the planet Vulcan in the Star Trek franchise. He always enjoyed the role, but in 1975 he wrote an autobiography called I Am Not Spock. In it, he clarified how different he was from the character he performed. In 1995, Nimoy published a follow-up autobiography, I Am Spock, in which he described the ways in which he was similar to the fictional alien. In the spirit of Nimoy's expansive self-definition, Aries, and in accordance with current astrological potentials, I invite you to make it clear to people exactly who you and who you aren't.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): The poet Rumi declared, "A lover has four streams inside, of water, wine, honey, and milk." With that in mind, Taurus, I will recommend that you seek a boost in the honey department. Your passions and feelings have been flowing along fairly well, but lately they've lacked some sweetness. As a result, you're not receiving as much of the sweetness you need from the world around you. So your assignment is to intensify the honey stream within you! Remember the principle, "Like attracts like."

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): I'm glad you're not on the planet Saturn right now. The winds there can blow at 1,000 miles per hour. But I would like you to feel a brisk breeze as you wander around in nature here on Earth. Why? Because according to my interpretation of the current astrological omens, winds will have a cleansing effect on you. They will clear your mind of irrelevant worries and trivial concerns. They'll elevate your thoughts as well as your feelings. Do you know the origin of the English word "inspire"? It's from the Latin word inspirare, meaning "blow into, breathed upon by spirit." Its figurative meaning is "to inspire, excite, inflame." The related Latin word spiritus refers to "a breathing of the wind" and "breath of a god"—hence "inspiration; breath of life."

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Cancerian author Franz Kafka put his characters into surreal dilemmas. In his novella The Metamorphosis, for example, the hero wakes up one day to find he has transformed into a giant insect. Despite his feral imagination, however, Kafka had a pragmatic relationship with consumerism. "I do not read advertisements," he said. "I would spend all of my time wanting things." In accordance with astrological omens, I invite you to adopt his earthy attitude for the next two weeks. Take a break from wanting things, period. Experiment with feeling free of all the yearnings that constantly demand your attention. Please note: This break in the action won't be forever. It's just a vacation. When you return to wanting things, your priorities will have been realigned and healed, and you'll feel refreshed.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Author Umberto Eco declared that beauty is boring because it "must always follow certain rules." A beautiful nose has to be just the right shape and size, he said, while an "ugly nose" can be ugly in a million different unpredictable ways. I find his definition narrow and boring, and prefer that of philosopher Francis Bacon, who wrote, "There is no excellent beauty that hath not some strangeness in the proportion." Poet Charles Baudelaire agreed, saying, "That which is not slightly distorted lacks sensible appeal: from which it follows that irregularity—that is to say, the unexpected, surprise and astonishment—is an essential part and characteristic of beauty." Then there's the Japanese concept of wabi-sabi, which reveres beauty that's imperfect, transitory, and incomplete. Beginning now, and for the rest of 2021, Leo, I encourage you to ignore Eco's dull beauty and cultivate your relationship with the more interesting kind.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): One of the more evocative passages in J. R. R. Tolkien's novel The Return of the King is about the warrior Éowyn. It says, "Then the heart of Éowyn changed, or else at last she understood it. And suddenly her winter passed, and the sun shone on her." I'm predicting a comparable transformation for you in the near future, Virgo. There'll be some fundamental shift in the way your heart comprehends life. When that happens, you will clearly fathom some secrets about your heart that have previously been vague or inaccessible. And then the sun will shine upon you with extra brilliance.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Libran actor and author Carrie Fisher had more than the average number of inner demons. Yet she accomplished a lot, and was nominated for and won many professional awards. Here's the advice she gave: "Stay afraid, but do it anyway. What's important is the action. You don't have to wait to be confident." I hope you'll employ that strategy in the coming weeks, dear Libra. The time is favorable for you to work hard on your number one goal no matter what your emotions might be at any particular moment.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Scorpio author Fyodor Dostoevsky (1821-1881) had a gambling addiction for many years. At one point, he lost so much money betting on roulette that he had to take drastic measures. He wrote a novella in record time—just 16 days—so as to raise money to pay his debt. The story was titled The Gambler. Its hero was a not-very-successful gambler. Is there a comparable antidote in your future, Scorpio? A gambit that somehow makes use of the problem to generate the cure? I suspect there is.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): In her poem "Escape," Michelle Tudor addresses a lover: "Inside of you: a dream raging to be set free." She implies that she would like to be a collaborator who provides assistance and inspiration in liberating her companion's dream. The coming weeks will be an excellent time for you to make a similar offer to an ally you care for—and to ask that ally to do the same for you. And by the way: What is the dream inside you that's raging to be set free? And what's the dream inside your comrade?

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Author Martha Beck has helpful counsel for you to keep returning to during the coming weeks. "It isn't necessary to know exactly how your ideal life will look," she writes. "You only have to know what feels better and what feels worse. Begin making choices based on what makes you feel freer and happier, rather than on how you think an ideal life should look. It's the process of feeling our way toward happiness, not the realization of the Platonic ideal, that creates our best lives."

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Aquarian author James Dickey celebrated "the holy secret of flowing." But he added, "You must be made for it." In other words, he implied that the secret of flowing is a luxury only some of us have access to. And because we "must be made for it," he seemed to suggest that being in possession of the secret of flowing is due to luck or genetics or privilege. But I reject that theory. I think anyone can tap into the secret of flowing if they have the desire and intention to do so. Like you! Right now! You're primed to cultivate a robust relationship with the holy flow.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Why do humans enjoy much longer life spans than other higher primates? Here's one reason: grandmothers. Anthropologists propose that earlier in our evolution, families with elder females especially thrived. The grandmothers helped care for children, ensuring greater health for everyone as well as a higher rate of reproduction than grandmother-less broods. Their longevity genes got passed on, creating more grandmothers. Lucky! Having older women around while growing up has been key to the success of many of us. In accordance with astrological omens, I invite you to celebrate and honor the role your own grandmothers and female elders have played in your life. And if you're a grandmother, celebrate and honor yourself! ●
